A word to his enemies

"If you’re an enemy reading this part of the book, say an insurance defense lawyer or a government attorney, you people in cages for as long as possible rather than rehabilitate them then your soul may burn by reading this part...

Lawyers have made seals to break this book. Anyone who reads it with an evil purpose, such as trying to bully ordinary people who are standing up for themselves against the elite power structure in the United States. Recognize the horror you are doing to our family and society. Soften your heart and help the people who are in need, rather than making their lives worse and helping the insurance defense industry.

Attorney Nick Rowley in the introduction of his 2013 book, "Trial By Human"

"I’m still an undertaker," says trial lawyer Nick Rowley, 39, who has accumulated a personal net worth of $20 million since he was a student at Descartes-Stern High School, where he was finally expelled in the early ’90s after a series of fights. A childhood spent defending himself from bullies has served him well in courtrooms from the West Coast to Malaysia.

Rowley admitted that the school’s activities director put Carter up to it, knowing full well a teacher had done the same with Carter and was eager to have him put down and end up costing $100,000.

For his closing argument, Rowley put on a yellow chicken costume, but put
